At Banquet of Railroad Branch He Says Secretary Is Interested in Men.

FIVE HUNDRED AT DINNER

Senator Ashurst Does Not Believe Op-

road officials. The spacious gymnasium was beautifully decorated with flags and palms, and music enlivened the processings.

"Birfore Secretary Daniels took the coath of office there were many who had doubts as to his ability." said the Secretary of State. "Now all doubts concerning him have been removed, and you seem to the said of the Secretary of State. "Now all doubts concerning him have been removed, and you seem to only interested in the gun at the head of the Navy Department who is not only interested in the gun, but the man behind the gun.

"In time of war we do not depend, upon the gun as much as upon the gun as much as upon the same who command, who steer the ships and aim the guns. Within four years in the standard of men in our country will be raised higher than they have been I raised in any previous four years. Mothers will be grateful that their sons I will return from the navy as pure and wholesome as when they loaned them to the government."

Secretary Bryan stated that in no country was the middle class as important and influential as in this country. There are a few weathy men and there are a few suffering great poverty, but the middle class is the great class which makes the wheels the government revolve.

The desire expressed by Secretary Ponnies inst night matures, there will be yearly insteady and in every battleship and in every battleship and in every that the middle class is the great class which makes the wheels the government revolve.

Mr. Daniels paid tribute to the railroad men by stating that in very few cases did he think accidents were due to the employes. He asserted that the majority of accidents were due to the lack of sufficient safety devices. He thought the directors of the railroad companies had-hot invested enough money in safety appliances.

the directors of the railroad companies Bad-not invested encody money in safety appliances.

The oft-repeated expression, from the poem of former Senator Ingalis of Kanasa. That "epportunity knocks at the door but once, never to return," did not concur with the ideas of Senator Ashurst, who also spoke. He alluded to the poem of William Maiose, the Irish poet, who stated that "opportunity," after once knocking, does not vanish forever, but lurks about the threshold, waiting to be selzed.

Senator Ashurst Does Not Believe Opportunity Runs Away After Knocking Once at Door.

Before Josephus Daniels has completed his term of office as Secretary of the Navy, no mother in the United States will have any prejudice against allowing her boy to enlist in the navy, and an interest of the states of the term of office as secretary of the Navy, no mother in the United States of the Navy, and an interest of the Navy,
